Double Eagle and Rising Sun
The Russians and Japanese at Portsmouth in 1905
The Russo-Japanese War and the peace conference that followed it at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, marked a turning point affecting not only the history of participants but the future of East Asia and the world. The 1905 Portsmouth Conference, mediated by President Theodore Roosevelt, for which he received the Nobel Peace Prize, brought to an end a war in which Japan won spectacular victories on land and sea. Although the peace settlement fell far short of public expectations in Japan, she gained supremacy in Korea and a sphere of influence in South Manchuria as a consequence of the treaty. Nevertheless, the treaty reflected the military stalemate in Manchuria. Roosevelt wanted a balance of power to emerge from the war, and his hope was realized in the peace process.

Raymond Esthus, drawing on the records of six nations, provides a detailed and panoramic account of the 1905 conference from the perspectives of both the Russians and the Japanese participants, depicting the

Praise

BUY

Cloth

Availability: Not available
Price: $64.95

REQUEST A DESK OR EXAM COPY

Information

Author/Editor Bios
Table of Contents
Rights
Additional Information

Author/Editor Bios

Rights

Sales/Territorial Rights: World

Rights and licensing

Additional Information

Related Items
Also Viewed

The Intimacies of Four Continents

Second World, Second Sex

History of Political Economy
The Soviets launched another air strike on TF 3 and again the CV Vinson CAP rose to the occasion destroying a Soviet M25 unit. The Soviet subs made another major torpedo attack, this time going for bigger game and they succeeded in damaging the US CG Antietam. A Soviet SN had the chance for the kill, but again American ASW saved the day!